

Be the connection – make a difference.

General Practitioners – possibility of a triple appointment integrating general practice, Aboriginal health, and research.

Looking to nourish your passion for primary care and community health? Interested in opening a new chapter in your career? This is your opportunity.

Expressions of interest are invited from vocationally registered General Practitioners to develop a unique and exciting appointment across three complementary settings:

- Rumbalara, one of the largest Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Services in Australia (clinical appointment);
- University of Melbourne Shepparton Medical Centre, a well-established primary care & teaching clinic (clinical appointment);
- University of Melbourne Department of Rural Health (academic appointment)

We are looking for an experienced and passionate GP who shares our values:

- Person-centred team care
- Passion for learning and teaching
- Innovation in primary care delivery
- Making a real difference through collaboration with our community and primary care partners

We can offer:

- A joint academic / clinical appointment with the University of Melbourne Department of Rural Health (if desired and subject to the University's criteria)
- A very collaborative and supportive environment
- An established patient base and more demand than we can currently satisfy
- Great opportunity to teach and mentor registrars and medical students
- Great opportunity to learn from community, researchers, and experienced GPs
- Support to undertake meaningful translational research
- % of revenue generated based on qualifications and experience

About us:

The University of Melbourne Shepparton Medical Centre is a modern, well equipped and fully computerised practice that is home to a dedicated team of GPs, four primary care nurses with skills in chronic disease, administrative staff as well as on-site pathology, counselling and a variety of allied health professionals. Uniquely, the clinic combines good business practice, population health focus, and teaching excellence to sustainably address unmet health needs and build the community's capacity.

Rumbalara Aboriginal Cooperative Ltd is the only Aboriginal Community Controlled Health Service in the Goulburn Valley. Shepparton is home to Victoria's largest Aboriginal community outside of Melbourne. Rumbalara works collaboratively with mainstream services to improve access to culturally safe health and social services.

The University of Melbourne Department of Rural Health provides professional health education and research training in a rural context. Based in Shepparton, the department has major nodes in Ballarat and Wangaratta. The department's success depends on support from local communities. Partnerships with many agencies across the Goulburn Valley (and beyond) underpin its work.

To find out more contact:

Sönke Tremper, Executive Director on s.tremper@shepmed.unimelb.edu.au.